

WHY CIVILIZATIONS CHOOSE TO FAIL RATHER THAN RECOGNIZING THE PROBLEMS AND MAKING THE NEEDED CHANGES

Society is not really looking for Change. Dr. Jared Diamond in his book “Collapse – How Societies Choose to Fail or to Succeed” has found a set of commonalities as to why civilizations collapse. Among these reasons are:

1. Failure to recognize a problem
2. Refusal or denial of a problems existence
3. Social structure that doesn't want the problem to interfere with their position
4. People are too occupied or committed to daily activity patterns to want change
5. People who make a profit in the existing system
6. People who actually profit from the problem (Exxon & Monsanto)
7. Civilizations expanding to maximum limits during optimum times
8. Major environmental contractions of food production and/or water availability causing rapid disintegration of existing supply distribution to collapse and repair/replacement.

Many of these actions are occurring now. But a major problem I am having is that even though the ideas regarding the ARC City and “In-Harmony” System are valid I do not personally have the credentials to be recognized.

The scientific community is slow to change even when one of their own theorizes a new postulate. It takes a great time and repeated tests or proofs to get a relatively conservative group to change their thinking. Both you and James Lovelock know this first hand.
